Thanksgiving

At my home church in New York City, we had an annual Thanksgiving meal at our church that fed 400-500 people. Some ate it in the fellowship hall in the basement and a lot of people took meals to go. Members made turkeys and sliced the meat, and there was one lady (who I never saw otherwise) who spent the Wednesday before making 50 sweet potato pies in the church kitchen. We had an abundance of everything: mashed potatoes, stuffing, sweet potatoes, corn, green beans and all kinds of pie.

Sharon, a member of Trinity, started the meal with Timmy, a guy from the neighborhood. I never actually met him, but as we said the prayers to start the meal, she always read us greetings and a Native American prayer from Timmy wherever he was.

After I had been there about three years, Sharon asked if I could coordinate this event so she could spend time with her family for the first time in 15 years, and, of course, I said I would even though I had never done anything like that before. She gave me a lot of directions beforehand, but then there were a lot of things that she said "would just work themselves out." One such thing was that "The New Jersey Family" would be bringing and cooking all the sides. I asked her who were, and did she have a phone number I could contact them beforehand to make sure. She said she only knew one guy, Jon, and no, there was no phone number. They would sometimes call the office and tell whoever answered the phone (or left a message) that they were coming. But I was told, don't worry about the sides "it would all work itself out."

The night before we were diligently getting everything ready and making sure we had everything, and there were no sides and, of course, I was worrying. And on the morning of Thanksgiving, I was there at 8am getting everything ready and there was a ton of activity in the dining room, but the kitchen was dormant. Other volunteers were asking me "What is with the sides? Should we start making the sides?" And I said, "No, Sharon said not to worry. Someone is coming to do that." But I was worrying. What is Thanksgiving without sides?

But at about 9am, I turned my head away for a second and when I looked back, the kitchen was filled with people! It was "The New Jersey Family" as promised. About 10 adults and maybe 400 children of all ages were bringing in instant mashed potatoes, stuffing boxes, butter, cans of green beans, and corn by the case, (and also a case of Bud Light and Diet Coke.) They got out aprons and took the pots and pans off of the shelves and started dumping everything in. It was a miracle! By 11am everything was ready to go and I had a chance to go and talk to Jon, the leader who was stirring some green beans and drinking a Diet Coke.

Jon had gone to Columbia University (which was near the church), he had met Sharon and Timmy and had started helping then. He kept on doing that after he went back to Jersey and he started bringing his brothers and they all started bringing their kids. They made it a family tradition of this. Every year for the last 20 or so years. He said his kids knew no other way to do Thanksgiving. I thanked them for being there and coming through for us. And he said (in a very New Jersey way) "No way, we thank you for letting us do this." For seven more years (even after I went to seminary) I was part of that meal, and every year, the New Jersey Family would magically appear and make all the sides. And I would have a similar exchange with them. I would thank Jon and his brothers and they would say "No, we thank you." I'm sure they said this to everyone who came in. So I wrote this this story and was coming up with a conclusion and I asked Heidi Neumark, the current pastor of Trinity, if the New Jersey Family was still doing the sides. She said, "Yes. They've now been doing it for 40 years."

Then she went on with this story:

For Thanksgiving 2020, the year of COVID, Trinity knew they couldn't have their usual sit-down meal with hundreds of people crowded around tables and cooks crammed into the kitchen. Then Jon called and said his family could prepare 300 take-out meals that they could give out in the front of the church. The Thanksgiving meal would be smaller than usual, but it would still go on. Three weeks before Thanksgiving, Jon called the church to finalize all the plans. Two days after that call, he had a massive heart attack and died.

Jon's son Ryan called to tell Pastor Heidi that, but in spite of their shock and grief, the family wanted to carry on in Jon's honor. Not only that, they would be coming with 1000 meals. Jon was the mayor of his town in Bloomingdale, NJ and there was such an outpouring of people who wanted to honor him. His family asked for food for Trinity's Thanksgiving meal. They cooked the food together in the school where Jon's wife worked and at the Bloomington Fire department. The Fire Department drove a truck to New York City with the food. In the end, they brought 1200 meals. They gave away over 1000 meals, but there was still more food than they could use, so Pastor Heidi contacted another organization that was sharing a meal later in the day to see if they needed anything. They said, "it's a miracle!". They didn't get all the food they expected and they didn't know what they were going to do.

I don't know what my point was going to be when I started this story, but I think my point now is that even in grief there can be gratitude. At Thanksgiving and all times, give thanks and be thankful for all the miracles, small and large that may come into your life.

Trinity is again having an in-person dinner this year (first since COVID) and the "New Jersey Family" is still doing the sides and is also brining 50 turkeys too.
